The Brewmaster's Castle was built in 1892-1894 by German immigrant, brewer, real estate investor and philanthropist, Christian Heurich (HI-rick). This Landmark on the National Register of Historic Places is the most intact late-Victorian home in the country, and has been featured on A&E's "America's Castles" and HGTV's "Dream Builders."

Constructed of reinforced steel and poured concrete, it was the first fireproof residence in the nation's capital.

Built with the most modern features of the day, including a steam central heating system, combination gas & electric light fixtures, central vacuum system, venting skylight, pneumatic and electric communications systems, full indoor plumbing, and accommodation for an elevator, it was also the "smart house" of the late-19th century. The 31 rooms feature hand-carved wood, 15 fireplaces with individually hand-carved mantles and bronze-plated cast iron fire backs, hand-painted ceiling canvases, and many original furnishings from the Heurich family's residency. Christian Heurich, the world's oldest brewer, one of Washington's most successful businessmen, the largest private landowner in the nation's capital, and the largest employer of Germans in the city in the early 20th century, lived in the home until his death in 1945 at the age of 102. The Brewmaster's Castle is open for public tours on Wednesdays at 12:15 and 1:15, available for private tours and special event rentals.

The Brewmaster's Castle
